This course probes seminal ideas and considers African discourses on world affairs. These discourses may be found in major books of fiction and nonfiction, speeches, films, songs, poetry, and folklore that have fashioned understandings of the politics, institutions, and people. The objective in this course's work is to gain new insights into time and place: fractures and unity defined through identities of race, ethnicity, class, gender, and culture. Proceeding in an interdisciplinary manner, the class opens archives and uncovers transcripts from the colonial era, the nationalist period, the struggle against apartheid, the drive for development, the rise of feminism, and the current phase of globalization. Meets with SIS-619 001.

SIS-095-016	SIS-496-003	Policies for Constructing Intergroup Relations	International Service	SIS	Undergrad	3	Creating trusting, cooperative intergroup relations in multiethnic societies is one of the challenges of our era. Over at least the past century and a half, the United States and many other countries have been addressing the question of how ethnopolitical groups can function together well within the boundaries of a single country. This course examines past and current policies, as expressed in law and institution building, to accommodate diverse populations and to ensure justice and fairness in situations where prejudice has held sway. The class looks at a variety of constitutional models designed to share power, and studies recent peace treaties and constitutions to see how these models have been adopted. In addition, students become familiar with the most salient debates about such issues as immigration policy, education policy, affirmative action, multiculturalism and the proper nature of religious toleration. The course uses case studies from Australia, Bosnia and Herzegovina, Canada, France, Germany, India, Iraq, Israel, Lebanon, Malaysia, Pakistan, the United Kingdom, and the United States. Forum, ASEAN Plus Three, East Asia Summit, and APEC. Meets with SIS-696 003.
SIS-095-017	SIS-496-020	U.S. Policy Toward Africa	International Service	SIS	Undergrad	3	From 1945 to 1990, American policy-makers largely treated Africa as a strategic appendage to the Cold War. After the demise of the Soviet Union, Africa entered a period of both renaissance and chaos in which U.S. policy has been searching for a new guiding purpose. This course carefully sets the historical context for current U.S.-African relations, and then surveys such potentially conflicting U.S. goals as military alliance in the global War on Terror, consolidation of ethnically-balanced democracies, reduction of poverty, increased trade and investment, and access to minerals. Students interview U.S. and African policy-makers and prepare a report on a particular country or policy.
