Migration, Identity, and U.S.-Mexican Relations

A panel discussion with the recipients of the 2012 William M. LeoGrande Award and Prize

3:30-5:00 PM, Monday, April 29
Mary Graydon Center 245

How has Mexico’s relationship with its migrant population changed over the past 150 years? What role do migrants and indigenous groups play in shaping Mexican identity? Join the Center for Latin American and Latino Studies (CLALS) and the School of Public Affairs for a conversation honoring the recipients of the inaugural William M. LeoGrande Prize for the best book on U.S.-Latin America relations, and the William M. LeoGrande Award for the best book or article on Latin America or Latinos published by an AU community member.

Panelists

José Ángel Hernández, recipient of the 2012 William M. LeoGrande Prize for the book Mexican American Colonization during the Nineteenth Century: A History of the U.S.-Mexico Borderlands, and Assistant Professor of History, University of Massachusetts at Amherst.

John Mill Ackerman, discussant, Associate Professor, Institute for Legal Research at the National Autonomous University of Mexico (UNAM) and Research Fellow, AU CLALS.

Moderated by William M. LeoGrande, Professor of Government, AU School of Public Affairs
