Latino Evangelicals

“[May] help Republicans take a bite out of the Democratic advantage with Hispanic voters. They prize the nuclear family. They are largely against abortion and gay marriage. They also tend to be wealthier than Latino Catholics....” (Rios 2013, np).

Take Home from Multivariate Models*

With few exceptions, Latino and Asian American Evangelicals less conservative than White Evangelicals and more conservative than Black Evangelicals

*Controlling for church attendance, party identification, and demographic factors
Take Home from Multivariate Models

Born-again identity predicts much wider range of policy views among whites compared to non-whites

White Evangelical Policy Agenda

Among Latinos, Evangelical identity does not predict a political agenda
Political Implications

• On issues where church encourages strong claim, there is tempered agreement among religious adherents

• On issues where church has been less insistent on setting an agenda, race matters --sharp differences between White and non-White evangelicals
Very few voting blocs up for grabs. Who will set the agenda?
