High Quality Employers

Whether a large or small organization, famous or obscure, the highest quality internships have terrific projects through which interns contribute and learn about their field and themselves.

Look at locations with a golden yellow placemark for additional insights and materials about that employer's internships.

This map is a starting point that we update regularly. If you have suggestions for High Quality Internship employers, email fblume@american.edu.

Internships

Internships are the best thing after sliced bread. Personally, I think they’re the best things after brunching and Sunday morning walks. A lot of us at AU have had amazing experiences at our internships, made friends and mentors or have received jobs because of the internships we’ve held.

Besides interning, I babysit weekly for a great family in the area. The parents of the kids I babysit for work in some major players in the labor world (labor industry? I don’t know). Sometimes they ask me what I’m doing at National Geographic and are almost boggled at how much “real work” I do 3 days a week while not getting paid. The past two months, I got an e-mail from the Father containing this article this should really read it. It’s bizarre some students have such good experiences.

There are always good and bad sides to any job or internship, and this article definitely points out the dark sides. I think AU has done a great job of making sure we don’t end up in situations mentioned in the article, and I know I’m lucky for not having to be the one to “wipe the door handles each day to minimize the spread of swine flu.”
