Management Consulting Focus

Persons with expertise in public administration are often asked to analyze and reform public service organizations. Such persons may do so as external consultants, internal auditors, or members of special task forces. Drawing on the broader group of course offerings in public management, this concentration helps students exercise the responsibilities associated with management consulting and institutional change. Professors Robert Tobias, Katherine Farquhar, and Robert Marshak advise students on this specialization.

Additional Required Course for the Management Consulting Focus (3):

PUAD 654 Organization Diagnosis and Change (3)

Human Resource Management Focus

Successful leaders of public service organizations recognize the importance of managing and motivating their workforces. They know that developing human capital is critical for promoting organizational effectiveness. This concentration helps students to understand the strategic role of human resource planning, develop skills to prepare employees for change, and improve management and employee relationships. Professor Edmund Stazyk advises students on this concentration.
