Brown Bag Lunches with OSF and JPO

On Tuesday, June 20, students at JPO had lunch with James deRousselle and Alex Johnson, two representatives from Open Society Foundation (OSF). As the first of a series of monthly lunchtime discussions, the students were introduced to OSF's mission and learned about James' and Alex's paths from college to their current positions at OSF. The lunch gave students a chance to discuss their academic interests and learn about the variety of careers that their criminal justice interests can lead them to. The OSF representatives shared helpful advice, including taking advantage of the incredible networking opportunities and events Washington, DC has to offer for those interested in criminal justice. They also advised students that being open-minded about professional opportunities is important as they figure out their career goals. The lunch exposed students to a variety of resources available to help them learn more about criminal justice issues and provided a platform to talk about current events. Please join us for the next lunch with OSF! For details, please email Genevieve Citrin Ray at citrin@american.edu.

Updates on the JDTC Initiative

The Coalition for Juvenile Justice hosted their annual conference on June 14-17, 2017 in Washington, D.C. Zoë Root, JPO Senior Policy Counsel & Project Director of the Juvenile Drug Treatment Court (JDTC) Initiative, presented with Jennifer Tyson from the U.S. Department of Justice, Office of Juvenile Justice and Delinquency Prevention (OJJDP). Their session, entitled "An Evidence-Based, Treatment Oriented, and Developmental Approach for Youth with Substance Use Disorders in the Justice System," focused on how to apply the research behind OJJDP's Juvenile Drug Treatment Court Guidelines. In this interactive and well attended session, they emphasized the importance of screening, assessment, evidence-based treatment, court practices, and equity of access.

The JDTC interactive listserv is up and running! If your JDTC is struggling to address an issue, chances are another court has dealt with it, too. This listserv provides courts with an opportunity to connect to the nationwide JDTC community, ask questions of others in the field, problem-solve, and share resources on issues unique to the JDTC field. To sign up, send an e-mail to jdtc@american.edu with "Subscribe to listserv" in the subject line.
