- Consultant to the Carter Center, Atlanta, Georgia (access to information and journalism issues)
- 1989-2005 Founder and Executive Director, the Center for Public Integrity (and its International Consortium of Investigative Journalists, the first working network of 100 premier reporters in the world from 50 countries producing content across borders), Washington, D.C.
- 1988-1989 Consultant, Kroll Associates, Washington, D.C.
- 1984-1988 Producer assigned to senior correspondent Mike Wallace, CBS News 60 Minutes, New York and Washington, D.C. Reportorial Producer (off-air investigative reporter), ABC News, Washington, D.C.
- 1977-1984 Reportorial Producer (off-air investigative reporter), ABC News, Washington, D.C.

- 1975-1976 Research Assistant, Committee on Governmental Affairs, United States Senate
- 1971-1975 Sportswriter and clerk, Wilmington, Delaware News Journal newspapers (part-time during college semesters, full-time otherwise)

Education:

- 1977 Johns Hopkins University School of Advanced International Studies, M.A. (with emphasis on U.S. foreign policy, Latin America area study and international economics; oral and written language proficiency in Spanish)
- 1975 University of Delaware, B.A. in political science with honors and distinction; (semester internship with Senator William V. Roth (R-DE) in Washington, Spring 1974. Named to Pi Sigma Alpha, national political science honor society. Language study in German)

Awards:

- 2014 Society of Professional Journalists 2013 Sigma Delta Chi Award in the “Research about Journalism.” This article, co-authored with Hilary Niles, was published by the Investigative Reporting Workshop and entitled, “Measuring Impact: The art, science and mystery of nonprofit news assessment.”
- 2014 American University Award for “Outstanding Scholarship, Research, Creative Activity and Other Professional Contributions.”
- 2013 "Missouri Honor Medal for Distinguished Service in Journalism," University of Missouri School of Journalism
- 2009 Honorary doctorate degree, University of Delaware
- 2004 PEN USA First Amendment Award “for expanding the reach of investigative journalism, for his courage in going after a story regardless of whose toes he steps on, and for boldly exercising his freedom of speech and freedom of the press.”
- 1998 MacArthur Fellowship (awarded by the John D. and Catherine T. MacArthur Foundation)
- 1996-2005 Center for Public Integrity reports (initiated, final edited and approved by the Executive Director) were honored 35 times by national journalism organizations, such as Investigative Reporters and Editors (IRE), the Society of Professional Journalists (SPJ) and others. In 2004, “Windfalls of War: U.S. contracts in Iraq and Afghanistan” won the George Polk award. In early 2005, the Center won the Edward R. Murrow award for best Web site (www.publicintegrity.org) in the United States, (small market category). Three co-authored Center books, published by HarperCollins, were that year’s Finalist for the IRE book award: The Buying of the President, in 1996; The Buying of the Congress, in 1998, and The Buying of the President 2000. In February 2007, the Center received a Special Citation by the Harvard University Shorenstein Center Goldsmith Prize judges for its body of “superb investigative work in the public interest.”

Multimedia Production:

Investigating Power (www.InvestigatingPower.org). Executive Producer, conceiving this five-year, $500,000 multimedia, oral history online presentation co-sponsored by the Investigative Reporting Workshop, the Center for Public Integrity and the Fund for Independence in Journalism. Presented at the National Press Club in Washington, and interviewed by Robert Siegel of NPR's All Things Considered, honoring independent journalism in America, with career timelines, 51 produced video excerpts and significant "truth to power" moments in contemporary U.S. history dating back to 1950, with still photos and archival video footage. Interviewed 23 important national journalists on high definition video and oversaw the production team of 22 people - producers, editors, researchers, web designers, etc. This will be an ongoing project, deepening in textual and video content over the years, hopefully including a total of 40 national journalists interviews by the end of 2015. This is the only website in the United States documenting the careers and historic impact of notable journalists. Published April 25, 2012.

“Iraq: The War Card,” The Center for Public Integrity, January 23, 2008. Created and directed this project which involved 11 researchers, editors and Web designers for two and a half years, to produce a 380,000-word chronology and database which identified 935 “false statements” by eight top administration officials who mentioned Iraq’s possession of weapons of mass destruction, or links to Al Qaeda, on at least 532 separate occasions in the two years after 9/11. Co-author of the project overview essay, “False Pretenses.” The entire online report was presented at a National Press Club news conference, weeks before the five-year anniversary of the invasion of Iraq; its findings were covered by more than 100 newspapers, including the New York Times, the Washington Post and USA Today, along with five major newswire services, and two dozen television and radio interviews (BBC, NPR’s All Things Considered, etc.) featured stories about and links to the project. “Iraq: The War Card” had the most one-day Web hits of any project in the history (at that time) of the Center for Public Integrity.

News Media:

New York Times, New York, New York, USA. (March 2013)

In March and April 2013, the Investigative Reporting Workshop and a contract writer we had hired, filmmaker-in-residence Catherine Rentz, wrote two important immigration detention solitary confinement stories (one on Page 1) in a joint byline with a Times staff reporter. The Workshop was named in the text of the article, which prompted a public reaction within 48 hours from then-Secretary of Homeland Secretary Janet Napolitano. This editor-to-editor relationship was shepherded by Rentz and Workshop managing editor Lynne Perri. Now, the two journalists (including Rentz) are collaborating to write a New York Times Magazine article about the same overall subject, for publication in the spring of 2014.

Global Journalist video interview/YouTube, Internet. (December 2013) Len Downie, former executive editor of the Washington Post, Mark Horvit, IRE executive director, and I were interviewed and the video is available on YouTube. Here it is:
