Washington Latin is a 5–12 charter school that provides a challenging, classical education to students throughout the District of Columbia. The school seeks strong teachers and administrators who love working with children and have a deep commitment to their academic field.
Imagine stepping into an elevator and standing next to someone who says, “Hi, I’m a recruiter at your dream organization. Tell me about yourself.” Could you concisely introduce yourself, your background and your career aspirations in the time of a quick elevator ride—30 seconds or less?

The goal of your elevator pitch is to provide a recruiter with enough background information and enthusiasm so that he or she wants to learn more about you.
Think of your pitch in three parts:

1. Who are you? Share your name and place yourself in context by explaining what school you attend, what you’re studying or where you currently work.

Example:

“Hi, my name is John Smith. I’m currently a junior majoring in international studies with a minor in Chinese language. I spent last semester in Beijing, where I studied and held an exciting internship with a small American marketing firm working with Beijing’s tourism agency. I saw that your firm has added some Chinese clients lately, which is why I’m eager to apply for one of your internships.”

2. What are your major accomplishments, passions, or unique skills? Frame them in a way that is meaningful to a potential employer.

3. What do you want or where are you going? Let the recruiter know what you’re looking for and the topic you’re interested in talking about. Don’t be pushy or aggressive, but do be forthright about the fact that you’re looking for a job or internship.
