

RELIGION'S ROLE IN RESPONSE TO CLIMATE-INDUCED DISPLACEMENT AND MIGRATION IN LATIN AMERICA

A workshop organized by American University's Center for Latin American and Latino Studies (CLALS) with generous support from the Henry Luce Foundation
June 1, 2018

WORKSHOP PARTICIPANTS

Susana Adamo is a research scientist at the Center for International Earth Science Information Network (The Earth Institute, Columbia University) and an adjunct assistant professor in the Undergraduate Program in Sustainable Development in the same university. She is also a member of the Scientific Advisory Committee of the Inter-American Institute for Global Change Research and co-coordinator of the Population and Environment Research Network (PERN). She received her a PhD in demography and sociology from the University of Texas at Austin. Dr. Adamo's research encompasses several fields: environmental migration and displacement, social vulnerability and environmental change, dynamics of internal migration in developing countries, rural/urban demography, and all aspects of data integration related to demography and environment links. Among other projects, she has worked on the development of gridded population databases including topics such as distribution and net migration; vulnerability and climate variability in Latin America; migration, cities and climate change; vulnerability to winter storms in the US Northwest; migration and meningitis in Sahel countries; and land use and population change in Latin American and the Caribbean.

Robert Albro is Research Associate Professor at American University's Center for Latin American & Latino Studies. He received his PhD in Sociocultural Anthropology from the University of Chicago, and has conducted ethnographic research and published widely on popular and indigenous politics along Bolivia's urban periphery, including resource wars over water and extractive resources. Much of that work is presented in his book, Roosters at Midnight: Indigenous Signs and Stigma in Local Bolivian Politics (SAR Press, 2010). More recently his work has engaged diverse arenas of cultural policy. His research and writing have been supported by the National Science Foundation, Mellon and Rockefeller foundations, and the American Council for Learned Societies, among others. He has been a Fulbright scholar, and held fellowships at the Carnegie Council, Kluge Center of the Library of Congress, and Smithsonian Institution. Dr. Albro currently serves as co-PI on the Henry Luce Foundation-funded project, "Religion and Climate Change in Cross-Regional Perspective." Email: albro@american.edu

Evan Berry is Associate Professor of Philosophy and Religion at American University and Co-Director of the Ethics, Peace, and Global Affairs master's program. He received his PhD in Religious Studies from the University of California, Santa Barbara. His research examines the intersections among religion, globalization, and climate change, and seeks to advance knowledge about the role of religious actors in contemporary environmental contestations. His recent book, Devoted to Nature: The Religious Roots of American Environmentalism (University of California Press, 2015) explores the religious sources of the environmental imagination in the United States. His current work combines ethnographic research with philosophical reflection to address the study of religious civil society groups actively engaged with the challenge of climate change. He currently serves as Principal Investigator on the Henry Luce Foundation funded project, "Religion and Climate Change in Cross-Regional Perspective." Email: berry@american.edu

Carolina de Abreu Batista Claro is a Voluntary Professor at the International Relations Institute at the University of Brasília and a soon-to-be appointed Substitute Professor in the Political Science Institute at the same university. She is also a Researcher at the Brazilian Institute for Applied Economic Research (IPEA). She holds a PhD in International Law from the University of São Paulo (USP, with honors), and a Master's in Sustainable Development from the University of Brasília. In 2017 she concluded her post-doctoral studies in International Relations at the University of Brasília. Her main research areas include:

environment-induced migration, migration laws and policies, statelessness, forced migration and human rights of migrants. And as a professor, researcher, consultant and pro bono lawyer, Dr. Claro has been working on questions relating to international migration in Brazil for over a decade. She is the Adjunct Coordinator for the Program and Research Nucleus on Environmentally Displaced Persons at the Paraíba State University (NEPDA/UEPB). She is also a member of Red Latinoamericana sobre el Derecho de las Personas Refugiadas, the Red Internacional de Migración y Desarrollo (RIMD), and the South-American Network for Environmental Migration (RESAMA). E-mail: cclaro@gmail.com

Ken Conca is Professor of International Relations in the School of International Service at American University. He received his PhD from the Energy and Resources Group at the University of California, Berkeley. His research and teaching are concerned with global environmental governance, environmental peacebuilding in war-torn societies, environmental politics and policy in the UN system, and water governance. Dr. Conca is author or editor of several books, including An Unfinished Foundation: The United Nations and Global Environmental Governance (Oxford University Press, 2015). Dr. Conca is a member of the United Nations Environment Programme's Expert Advisory Group on Conflict and Peacebuilding. He is a two-time recipient of the International Studies Association's Harold and Margaret Sprout Award for best book on international environmental affairs and a recipient of the Chadwick Alger Prize for best book in the field of International Organization. He was also recently honored with the prestigious Al-Moumin Award and Distinguished Lecture on Environmental Peacebuilding. Email: conca@american.edu

Sarah Deardorff Miller leads the Capstone Mercy Corps project, which focuses on refugee youth, and is an Adjunct Assistant Professor of International and Public Affairs at Columbia University. She is also adjunct faculty at American University's School of International Service and the University of London's School of Advanced Study. Dr. Deardorff Miller received her PhD in International Relations from Oxford University. Her research focuses on the politics of forced migration and on the role of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees in protracted refugee situations. She has worked on refugee issues with various non-profit organizations, including Tanganyika Christian Refugee Service in Tanzania, the World Council of Churches in Switzerland, and World Relief in the United States. She has carried out research or consulted in Thailand, Jordan, Lebanon, Syria, Nepal, Kenya and Uganda, and written a book on Syrian displacement, Political and Humanitarian Responses to Syrian Displacement (Routledge, 2016). Dr. Deardorff Miller has assisted with displacement-related projects at USAID and the Department of State as a Franklin Fellow, and consulted with think tanks like the Brookings Institution. Email: sarah.deardorff@sas.ac.uk

Todd Eisenstadt is Professor of Government at American University's School of Public Affairs and is also affiliated with the School of International Service and the Latin American Faculty for Social Sciences (FLACSO) in Quito, Ecuador. He received his PhD from University of California, San Diego. Dr. Eisenstadt's research and writing has focused on constitution-making processes, environmental politics, indigenous movements, and climate-induced migration. He was recently principal investigator for a National Science Foundation project titled "Who Speaks for Nature? Indigenous Environmental Movements, Public Opinion, and Ecuador's Petro-State" (2014-2017). And he has authored or edited several award-winning books, including Politics, Identity, and Mexico's Indigenous Rights Movements (Cambridge University Press, 2011), and Courting Democracy in Mexico: Party Strategies and Electoral Institutions (Cambridge University Press, 2004). Dr. Eisenstadt has also served as director of multiple United States Agency for International Development (USAID) grants in Mexico. Email: eisensta@american.edu

Francois Gemenne is a FNRS senior research associate at the University of Liège (Belgium), where he directs the Hugo Observatory. He is also co-director of the French Ministry of Defense's Observatory on Defense and Climate. He lectures on environmental and migration policies in various universities, including Sciences Po (Paris and Grenoble) and the Free University of Brussels, where he holds the Bernheim Chair on Peace and Citizenship. Dr. Gemenne holds a joint doctorate in political science from Sciences Po Paris and the University of Liège. His research is concerned with environmental and migration governance, in particular populations displaced by environmental changes, including natural disasters, and the policies of adaptation to climate change. He has conducted field studies in New Orleans after hurricane Katrina, Tuvalu, China, Kyrgyzstan, the Maldives, Mauritius and Japan, after the Fukushima disaster. He has authored many peer-reviewed articles and authored or edited multiple books, including co-authoring The Atlas of Environmental Migration (Routledge, 2016) and co-editing the Handbook of Environmental Migration (Routledge, 2018). Among other activities, Dr. Gemenne was a 2015 Fulbright scholar at Princeton University and is director of the Sustainable Development series at Presses de Sciences Po.

Eric Hershberg is Director of the Center for Latin American & Latino Studies and Professor of Government at American University. He received his PhD in Political Science from the University of Wisconsin-Madison. His most recent publications include two co-edited volumes, one with Maxwell A. Cameron, entitled Latin American Left Turns: Politics, Policies, and Trajectories of Change (Lynne Rienner, 2010) and the second, New Institutions for Participatory Democracy in Latin America: Voice and Consequence (Palgrave Macmillan, 2012), with Maxwell A. Cameron and Kenneth E. Sharpe. Dr. Hershberg has taught at New York University, Southern Illinois University, Columbia, Princeton, and The New School. He also served for fifteen years as a Program Director at the Social Science Research Council in New York City. He currently also serves as co-PI on the Henry Luce Foundation-funded project, “Religion and Climate Change in Cross-Regional Perspective.” Email: hershber@american.edu

Patrick Innocent serves as a Project Officer of SCH (Service Chretien d’Haiti), a leading social and environmental organization in Haiti. He is also the Deputy Coordinator of PSC-CC (Plateforme de la Societe Civile sur le Changement Climatique en Haiti). Mr. Innocent is a specialist in environmental sociology, and climate change. He has engaged in extensive outreach toward improving and enhancing the living conditions of the environment and has worked for several years on immigration and refugee matters at the Haitian-Dominican boarder, where he implements several immigrations policies. He is also an expert in gender equality, particularly with respect to insuring equal access to resources and opportunities. He holds a BA in Sociology. Email: ipatrick81@yahoo.fr

Anthony Oliver-Smith is Professor Emeritus of Anthropology at the University of Florida, and is affiliated with its School of Natural Resources and Environment and Center for Latin American Studies. He has carried out anthropological research, consulted, and published widely on issues relating to disasters and involuntary resettlement in Peru, Honduras, India, Brazil, Jamaica, Mexico, Japan, and the United States, including his book Defying Displacement: Grassroots Resistance and the Critique of Development (University of Texas Press, 2010). Prof. Oliver-Smith has held the Greenleaf Chair of Latin American Studies at Tulane University’s Stone Center for Latin American Studies (2008) and the Munich Re Foundation Chair on Social Vulnerability at the United Nations University Institute on Environment and Human Security (2007). He has also served on the executive boards of the National Association of Practicing Anthropologists, Society for Applied Anthropology, as well as the Social Sciences Committee of the Earthquake Engineering Research Institute. He is a member of La Red de Estudios Sociales en Prevención de Desastres en America Latina. In 2013 he was awarded the Bronislaw Malinowski Award of the Society for Applied Anthropology for lifetime achievement in disaster studies and resettlement research. Email: aros@ufl.edu

Jayesh Rathod is a Professor of Law at American University Washington College of Law, and founding Director of its Immigrant Justice Clinic. He is a graduate of Columbia Law School and Harvard College. His areas of expertise interests include immigration law, labor and employment law, legal pedagogy, occupational safety and health, and clinical legal education, and he has published widely on these topics. Previously, he was a Staff Attorney at CASA of Maryland, representing low-wage immigrant workers on employment law and immigration matters. He also practiced in the litigation section at Wilmer, Cutler & Pickering LLP, and was law clerk to the Honorable Louis F. Oberdorfer, of the US District Court for the District of Columbia. In addition to many speaking invitations, Prof. Rathod has served as a commentator in local and national media (including CNN, NBC News, and National Public Radio). He has also worked with numerous non-governmental organizations to advance the civil and human rights of communities in the United States and abroad. He currently serves on the Council of Advisors of South Asian Americans Leading Together (SAALT). Email: jrathod@wcl.american.edu

Daniela Stevens is a Ph.D. Candidate in Political Science at American University's School of Public Affairs. She is a recipient of a 2014 Tinker Field Research Grant, which supported her dissertation research titled "Uniting Behind Presidential Bills Even in a Divided Congress: Evidence from Mexico's National and Subnational Legislatures." Her research focuses on national and subnational policies that put a price on carbon emissions. She has also written multiple blog posts for American University's Center for Latin American & Latino Studies (the AULA Blog), including "Mexico: Environmental Initiatives Likely to Stir Things Up."

Toby Alice Volkman is Director of Policy Initiatives and Secretary at the Henry Luce Foundation where she is primarily responsible for the Henry R. Luce Initiative on Religion and International Affairs. This initiative was launched in 2005 to deepen American understanding of the role of religion in the international arena, and to connect scholarly, media, and policy communities working on these issues. Dr. Volkman is a cultural anthropologist with a PhD from Cornell University. Prior to joining the Luce Foundation, Dr. Volkman worked with the Ford Foundation International Fellowships Program, where she edited Origins, Journeys, and Returns: Social Justice in International Higher Education (SSRC, 2009). As a Program Officer at the Ford Foundation in the 1990s, she developed "Crossing Borders," an initiative to revitalize the field of area studies. She has also served as director of the South and Southeast Asia Programs at the Social Science Research Council, and as deputy provost at the New School. Email: tvolkman@luce.org

Robert Warwick is the Senior Director overseeing the Development and Humanitarian Assistance (DHA) programs worldwide for Church World Service. For more than a year he has held the post of Acting Vice President, DHA. His development and humanitarian work began with the US Peace Corps in Malawi more than 25 years ago. Prior to joining CWS, Robert worked with several non-government organizations leading international development, emergency relief and US domestic refugee resettlement programs for organizations such as the International Rescue Committee, CARE Canada, Action Against Hunger and the American Refugee Committee. Robert's management focus includes food security, disaster risk reduction, health and nutrition as well as a lifelong commitment to partnership building and local capacity development. He is now based in Washington DC but has lived and worked for more than two decades in Africa, Asia and the Middle East with frequent travel to South America and Europe. Email: rwarwick@cwsglobal.org

Erin Wilson is the Director of the Centre for Religion, Conflict and the Public Domain at the Faculty of Theology and Religious Studies, University of Groningen. She received her PhD in Political Science from the University of Queensland. Her research focuses on the intersection of religion with politics and public life, at the local, national and global levels. This includes attention to the interconnections between religion, secularism, global justice and human rights, with a particular emphasis on forced migration, gender equality and sexual and reproductive health and rights in development, and the right of freedom of religion or belief. Prof. Wilson has published widely on religion and global justice, globalization, active citizenship and the politics of asylum in International Studies Quarterly, the Journal of Refugee Studies, Global Society, Globalizations and Politics, Religion, Ideology. She was previously a research fellow at RMIT University, Melbourne. Her books include After Secularism: Rethinking Religion in Global Politics (Palgrave, 2012) and Justice Globalism: Ideology, Crises, Policy (Sage, 2014), co-authored with Manfred B. Steger and James Goodman. Email: e.k.wilson@rug.nl