Asian American LEAD

AALEAD's overarching goal is to increase the opportunities and ability of low-income Asian American children to move out of poverty and become successful, self-sufficient adults. AALEAD firmly believes that education is the key to meeting this goal. However, AALEAD understands that children need additional family, school, and personal support, not just academic assistance, to succeed. Consequently, AALEAD uses a five-pronged approach to youth development, offering each child after school intervention in a safe space, mentoring, family support and educational advocacy.

Association of Vietnamese Americans

AVA is a non-profit organization that serves the needs of low-income immigrant families and seniors. AVA works to empower the Vietnamese American community to live healthy, happy, successful lives by providing direct services to families with school-aged children, isolated seniors, and new immigrants. Direct services focus on family relationships and education, healthcare and access to government services, and naturalization. Students are needed for assistance with mentorship, web design, grants, office support, and special events planning/staffing. Knowledge of Vietnamese is useful for other tasks like transportation, visiting seniors, research & surveying, teaching English, and interpretation/translation.
