NOTE: As a Campus Consortium sponsor, AU's School of Communication (SOC) and the Pulitzer Center this year will select one student, from across the university, for a fellowship sponsored by AU's Center for Latin American and Latino Studies (CLALS). Proposals for this fellowship must address the theme of religion and the plight of people in Latin America or the Caribbean who are forced to move across international borders in response to environmental changes or disasters. Because of the pandemic, reporting may take place in or outside the United States. Remote reporting also is possible this year.

Further details about how to think of this topic are available here:

The fellowship winner receives a $3,000 stipend.

3) Provide a short description of your proposed project in the space below or on a separate document (250 words or less).

Supplemental descriptive information may also be submitted, but the 250-summary is key.

4) Include your resume and 2-3 recent samples of your work. Please include links to your photo or video samples.

5) It would greatly assist us if applicants submit a list of any other plausible distribution avenues, aside from the Pulitzer Center, they are considering for their reporting.

6) One letter of recommendation. This letter may be submitted by one of the three persons you've listed above as a reference. The letter should explain the recommender's relationship with you (for example professor, advisor); it should address your skills and your ability to complete the project you've proposed.

Students must submit electronic applications to Professor Bill Gentile no later than midnight of Sunday 4 April 2021. Late submissions will not be accepted. No exceptions.

Please send electronic applications to billgentile@billgentile.com.

We expect to announce the fellowship winner by the end of April 2021.
